JÖRG MÜHLE
Little Rabbit Series

Tickle My Ears

Little Rabbit is very tired and it's already bed time. When the reader taps Little Rabbit on the shoulder, it turns around. When the reader claps his/her hands, Little Rabbit jumps into its pyjamas and when the pillow has been fluffed up, too, it's time for a goodnight kiss. But it's only when the reader has switched off the lights that Little Rabbit can finally snuggle up and happily drop off to sleep—just like the little reader him-/herself!

Bathtime for Little Rabbit

Do you know a child that enjoys having its hair washed? Little Rabbit also needs to be talked into it, but then it turns out to be not quite so bad after all. When the hair dryer is broken, each and every reader is encouraged to blow. Harder! Now putting the lotion on and then bath day is over with. Little Rabbit is clean. Spick and span!

Poor Little Rabbit!

Little Rabbit has fallen over! Let's hope he's alright. But Little Rabbit needs help, because he has hurt his arm. It even bleeds! We'll have to take action.

So together we put a plaster on the wound, comfort Little Rabbit, dry his tears, help blow his nose—and everything is alright again!

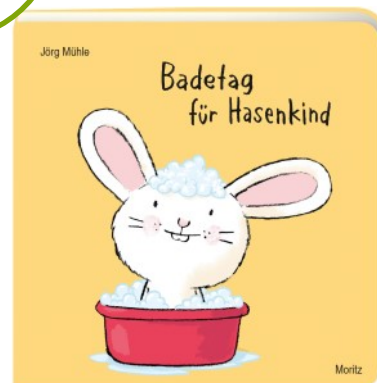

Little children are very familiar with what Jörg Mühle is putting into lovely images and they will happily join in making Little Rabbit laugh again.
